The COVAC Global Evacuation: Get Sick, Get home

Once you arrive at the airfield, you will be taken to one of our private air ambulances, fully equipped with all the necessary equipment needed to handle severe COVID cases, and a medical staff consisting of flight doctors, specialist nurses, and paramedics. These aircraft are designed to handle the full spectrum of medical emergencies, and while we do our utmost to ensure our members are comfortable, members should expect the surroundings to be those of an emergency vehicle. While in air, we opt for the least invasive options to keep our members safe, for mild cases our members can expect to wear PPE along with our flight crew. For severe cases, we will have exactly the provisions needed to keep your members safe.

Upon landing in your home country, at whatever available airfield is closest to your home, we will have transport waiting for you to take you directly to your home or, if necessary, to your hospital or doctor.

This entire process can often be completed within the day for close destinations, such as Mexico to the U.S., and will rarely take more than a couple of days even for far flung destinations or complicated cases.

COVAC Global is not travel insurance, and we are committed to treating our members with the highest level of care and attentiveness. While there is no expectation of payments directly to our members, we will not surprise you with any hidden fees or charge a deductible should you need to be evacuated – all our members pay is the original cost of the membership.

Rest assured, COVAC Global will work tirelessly to get you home should you fall sick with COVID-19 while traveling. We have developed our expert team and efficient evacuation process so that you can rest easy while you travel, knowing that if you need us, we will be ready.

The COVAC Global Evacuation: Get Sick, Get home

by David Lloyd and
Ross Thompson

COVAC Global is the world's first fully indemnified COVID-19 evacuation and repatriation program, staffed with our team of medical and repatriation experts who bring decades of experience getting people home quickly and safely from even the most challenging environments. From the moment one of our members calls in sick with COVID-19, our global team mobilizes to execute a series of procedures that gets them home as safely and efficiently as possible.

As a COVAC Global member, if you find yourself sick with COVID while traveling, the process is simple. Call our 24/7 operations number, and wherever you are, our highly trained team will coordinate with the aeromedical assets closest to you, conduct a brief medical consult, and once you send us your PCR test results, take care of the rest.

Once we determine your location and condition, we will send ground transport directly to you. If your condition is severe, we will have medical staff standing by to provide treatment the moment you are under our care.

Our operations are not limited just to cars, ambulances, and planes either. Some recent members who were staying on isolated islands were even transported via helicopter and speedboat to the air ambulance and then home.

Landing permits, clearance to transport a COVID-positive patient, overflight permits, and CDC clearance (for our U.S. based clients) can be complicated. This is something our members never need to worry about. Behind the scenes, our repatriation experts are compiling the necessary paperwork to ensure all the legal requirements are met and accounted for. Once we obtain all the proper clearances on both the inbound and outbound destinations for evacuating and repatriating a COVID-positive patient, our pilots get on the flight schedule.
